More About the Role of a Commissaire

Commissaire is the term for an official in competitive cycling. The vast majority of cycling events require two or more commissaires to fulfil a variety of roles, including supervising pre-and post-race formalities, briefing riders and race officials, checking the compliance of equipment, monitoring compliance with the rules and maintaining safety during racing, resolving disputes and judging results. Sitting as a panel, chaired by the Chief Commissaire they serve to resolve contentious decisions. The Chief Commissaire or President of the Commissaires' Panel is the holder of ultimate authority over the event.

Commissaires' administrative duties include checking riders' eligibility to compete and filing results and reports on race organisation, incidents and penalties.

The Commissaires' course plans to equip you with the knowledge to officiate at competitive cycling events.
